Airhead!

The diary of an incompetent air-con apprentice...

MONDAY

Went with Max to The Watering Hole after work to watch the England v. Germany game. Usual nightmare - lost to a goal from a corner in the last minute. 'Seems the English keeper shouted "Get closer!" to his defenders as the cross came over... So they all bunched together - leaving the German striker, Klose, totally unmarked to blast the ball into the net. Doh! Game over. Today's tabloid headline read: 'Lost in translation!'

During the game Max was bragging to the Irish bar-manager, D'hgurrheighnurrn (pronounced Darren), that he'd installed all the heating systems (underfloor, radiators, solar hot water) at the palatial new villa being built for one of the England players. "Can't reveal who, of course...", he said, tapping his nose, "Let's just say he's as thick as a brick and is dating a Page Three girl". Which doesn't exactly narrow it down...

TUESDAY

Blimey, there's a coincidence... Just heard that our England-player client wants to visit his new villa soon... But there's a problem - the architect can't get a habitation licence for the property. 'Seems Max signed-off some of the building and installation work but doesn't have an Alvará (the builder's / installer's licence) - so it's been declared illegal! The local authority are insisting that all systems be replaced by a fully-licensed company. Max went crazy - "This'll cost me a bloody fortune!", he yelled, hurling an ashtray across the office. Almost took my eye out.

WEDNESDAY

Worse news - the project has been passed to Penguin! Max was livid: "But they don't have an Alvará for projects like this - do they?"

"Er, yes", I replied from behind my computer, checking out their website, "Seems they do... They're fully-licensed for all heating & cooling projects, including the building and electrical work." "The smart-arses will be quick to publicise that they got this job..." he muttered, storming out.

FRIDAY

Max stormed back in this morning, slamming the local paper on my desk, open at the property section. "What did I say?", he snarled. The headline read: 'Home Victory! England star praises last-minute assist from Penguin'
